Spring 2011

Traditions of the Modern World

After years of preliminary planning, final planning has begun for the World History Center, a new kind of interactive Teaching Museum, in the Main Library of CSUEB. It will provide students and the wider community with a "Walk through World History." In the final planning process, a series of one-gallery "pilot" exhibitions will present aspects of the Special Collections of the Library in cultural groupings.

Starting in the Spring Term of 2011 the Emeriti Study Room in the Main Library was converted into a classroom gallery. Now known as the Emeriti Gallery, it has become a place for interns in the Art Museum & Gallery Studies Certificate Program to gain experience in exhibition design using prints and books from Special Collections and extended loans from the Institute for Aesthetic Development.

The pilot exhibition program will include Part 1: "Traditions of the Tribal World: Africa, Oceania, & the Americas," Part 2: "Traditions of the Ancient World: Egypt, West Asia, Crete, Greece, & Rome" Part 3: "Traditions of the Asian World: Taoist, Hindu, Buddhist, & Islamic," Part 4: "Traditions of the Modern World."

The first exhibition in this special series is "Traditions of the Modern World: Six Centuries of Western Art, Literature, & Science." Its purpose is to begin to work out the curatorial principles that will be used in the future World History Center.

On each wall is an original work of art from a particular era that is surrounded by museum-quality replicas from the same era, works that help students to visualize each cultural period of World History as a whole. A special feature of this European exhibition is that on each wall is an original print by a major artist seen next to a deluxe edition of a book illustrated by the same artist, artists such as Botticelli, Leonardo, Durer, Blake, Manet, Matisse, and Miró. The "illustrated book" tradition goes back thousands of years, to the Bronze Age hieroglyphs of Egypt and Stone Age picture-writing. The concept of the "pictured word" forms a connecting link between all five parts of the pilot exhibition series.

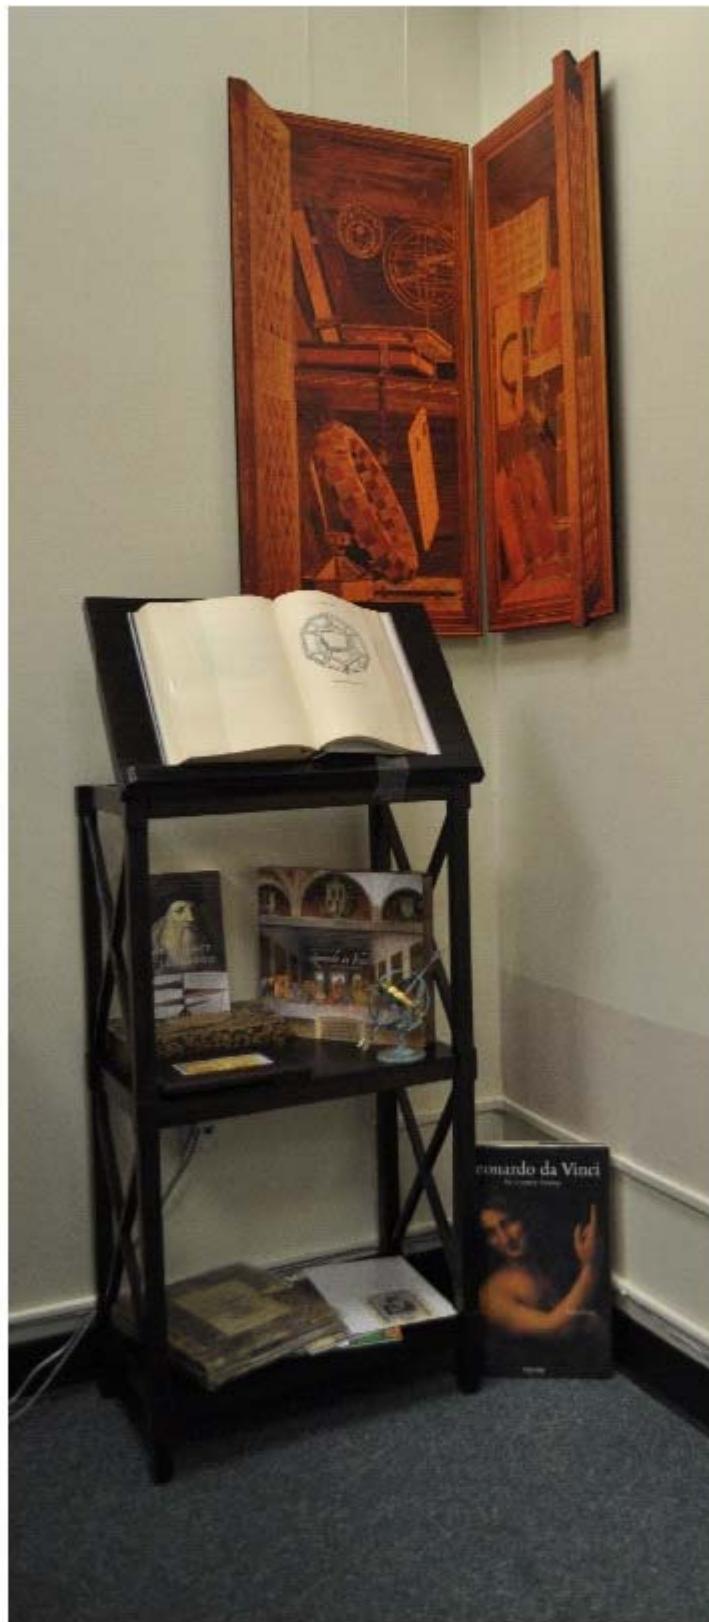

In the Renaissance corner of the Emeriti Gallery is an extensive display of Leonardo centered on the one book that he illustrated, Divina Proportione (1509). Leonardo is the archetypical figure in whom art and science are of equal importance. The World History Museum is being planned as a way of visualizing history as a whole, with art, literature, science, and cultural values being given equal attention. The Wisdom Traditions of many cultures (Tribal, Taoist, Hindu, Buddhist, Jewish, Christian, and Islamic) teach that only when thought and feeling are of equal importance, only when the left-brain by which we read and the right-brain by which we see, are equally active on a regular basis can we achieve the fullness of our humanity.

The graduate students who worked on the exhibitions of Spring 2011 were Daniel Charm (design), Lisa King (registration), and Joan McLoughlin (selection). The installation was fabricated by Richard Apple, Head of Special Collections, University Library, CSUEB. He also made these photographs.
